Beware of Imposter Scams

What is an imposter scam?

It refers to any type of scam where a fraudster attempts to trick you into providing your personal information or sending money.

Imposter scams lean on two main methods of luring victims:

Authority: With this technique, scammers take advantage of the fact that people are not likely to question authority figures, and/or they fear the “scary” consequences threatened by the scammer. For example, scammers may pretend to be:

Your electric or gas company claiming they’ll cut off your services unless you pay what you owe them.

The IRS or Social Security Administration telling you that you owe taxes and/or fees and threatening criminal charges.

Your bank, telling you there’s a problem with your account and requesting money transfers or account details.

A “tech support” company explaining there’s something wrong with your computer and offering to help—for a fee.

Familiarity: This type of imposter scam is particularly devious. Bad actors pretend to be a loved one and try to persuade you to give them sensitive personal information or send them money through a digital payment platform, by wire, or via check. The scammer may, for instance:

Claim to be (or be with) your grandchild or other close family member, saying they’re in serious trouble and need emergency financial help (e.g., bail money or money for medical bills).

Pretend to be romantically interested in you, and suddenly start asking you for money or bank account details after gaining your trust and affection. This is also known as a sweetheart scam.

Important: Recently, we have been alerted to a scam involving text messages and emails from someone claiming to be “Father Dan”. They are asking you to send them gift cards to help someone who is ill. If you’re contacted by “Father Dan” or any other person attempting this scam, hang up the phone immediately. Do not reply to any text messages or click on any links. If you are unsure or just want to check if someone contacting you is really that person, please call them, or in this case, please call the Parish Office.

Best Safe! ~ Fields of Grace Family of Parishes
